A PARABLE.

A sturdy stream flowed fast along,
Twas in a dry, as a mow's song;
Its look was glad, its waves were bright,
And broke in a purest light.
Over its surface, all the way,
The blossoms bent in sweet array;
It gave them kisses, cool and soft,
Which left them sick, more pure and soft.
This traveler was so kind and true,
That it would serve him true.
Though it collected every brook,
It always gave in more than it took;
Thus lived a life of generous giving,
And grew each day to greater living.

A pool of water, stagnant still,
Lay listlessly on a hill.
It served no purpose save to nurse
Vile weeds, which made its visage worse;
For foulness was upon its face,
And many shrubs from all its place.
On Nature's future, 'twas a blot,
A mass of uselessness, a spot;
And all because it did not give,
Supplied by a few little rills.
It looked then up on the hills,
And always sighed in its still;
It daily died and then it lived.

Thus generous souls live like the first,
Lift high ones do self-sacrifice.

Professor Haeckel's Life in Ceylon.

My great resource as an article of diet, was the fruit which abounded at every meal. Next to the bananas of every variety, of which I consumed several at every meal, my standing dessert, consisted of mangoes (Mangifera indica), egg-shaped green fruit, from three to six inches long; their cream-like golden pulp has a faint but distinct aroma of turpentine. The fruit of the passion-flower (passiflora) was very pleasant to taste, reminding me of the gooseberry. I was less pleased with the renowned custard-apple, the Annona squamosa, and with the Indian almond, the hard nut of the Terminalia catappa. There are single hairy few apples and oranges in Ceylon; the latter remain green, and are not juicy; but want of cultivation is doubtless chiefly answerable for the inferiority of this and other fruits; the Singhalese are far too easy-going to make any progress in horticulture. Refreshed with my modest repast, I enjoyed the hot hours of mid-day, from twelve to four o'clock—in anatomical or microscopic work in making observations and drawings, and in the preservation and storing of my collected objects. The evening hours, from four to six o'clock, were generally occupied with some lovely country excursion; sometimes I made a water-color sketch, sometimes I sought to perpetuate one of the beautiful views in photography. Now and then I shot apes and birds in the woods, or collected insects and snails, or hunted among the coral reefs on the shore, adding many curious objects to my collection. Richly laden, I returned to the Rest House an hour or less before sunset, and worked for another hour at the preservation and arrangement of my specimens. At eight o'clock my second chief meal, or dinner, was served. The piece de resistance at this was again the inevitable curry and rice, followed sometimes by a fish or a crab, which I enjoyed immensely, and then by some dish composed of eggs or meal, and finishing again with delicious fruit.

The important question of "what to drink" seemed likely at first to prove a difficult one. The ordinary drinking water of the low lands of Ceylon is considered very bad and unwholesome, the highlands, on the contrary, being rich in springs of the purest and freshest water. The great rains which fall daily on the island bring down a mass of mineral and vegetable deposit into the river, and the stagnant water of the lagoons is not unreasonably in common with them. It is not customary to drink the water unless cooled or made into tea, or with the addition of claret or whisky. My friend Scott had given me an abundant supply of the last-named beverage, but on the whole I found no drink so pleasant and refreshing as well as wholesome, as the fresh milk of the cow or goat.

My frugal dinner at an end, I usually took a solitary walk on the shore, or delighted my eyes with the sight of the illumination of the palm woods by myriads of fire-flies and glow-worms. Then I made a few entries in my notebook or tried to read by the light of a cocoanut oil lamp. But I was generally quite tired enough to go to bed soon after nine o'clock, after another careful shaking of the clothes for the expulsion of scorpions and millipedes.

The great black scorpion (nearly a foot long) is so common in Ceylon that I once collected half a dozen in the course of an hour. Snakes exist also in great numbers. Slender green tree-snakes hang from almost every bough, and at night the great rat-snake (Crotaphytus Baumhachii) hunts rats and mice over the roofs of the huts. Although they are harmless and their bite not poisonous, it is by no means a pleasant surprise when one of these rattlesnakes, five feet long, suddenly drops through a hole in the roof into one's room, occasionally alighting on the bed. On the whole, however, my nights in Belligam were but little disturbed by animal intruders, although I was often kept awake by the howling of jackals and the uneasy cry of the Devil-bird (a kind of owl, Surnum lubrami), and other night birds. The bell-cry of the pretty little tree-frog, which make their dwelling in the cups of large flowers, acted rather as a slumber song. But I was far more kept awake by the whirl of my own thoughts, by the recollection of the many events of the past day, and the anticipation of that which was to come. A brilliant succession of observations, and varied experiences mingled in my brain with plans of fresh enterprise and new discoveries for the morrow. —Deutsche Literaturzeitung.

A Swallow Story Hard to Swallow.

The story of the Western swallows recalled to the mind of a resident of Providence another story concerning these curious birds. "Nearly sixty years ago," said he, in substance, "when I was living in the town of Littleton, Me., the occurrence of which I am about to tell you took place. My father's house was on the old post road connecting the towns of Brunswick and Augusta and about half way between those places. Early in the autumn my father noticed large numbers of swallows for several days flying over his farm to the north. Singular sights of the birds had in other years been noticed by residents of the vicinity, and comparison of testimony showed that the swallows were evidently flying to a common center not far away. The night had continued two or three days, when my father and two or three of his neighbors determined to solve the mystery. Starting about five o'clock one afternoon, they followed the direction taken by the birds, and came to the edge of a grove. Here they were astonished to see hosts of swallows coming in from all directions and disappearing through a hole in the top of the tall and lifeless trunk of a basswood tree. The aperture where the birds entered the tree was about thirty feet from the ground, was six inches or so in diameter, and was evidently caused by the breaking of a rotten limb. The farmers, having noticed that none of the birds came out, but were constantly going in, went home more puzzled than ever. A day or two after, when the matter had been taken over among the farmers, several of them returned to the tree, my father among the number, with the intention of cutting it down. They set to work to fell the tree. Only a few birds seemed to be disturbed or frightened away by the action of the farmers, and the tree finally fell to the ground. The farmers were utterly astonished to find it nothing but a hollow shell, and a pile of rot from bottom to top with dead swallows. The tree was about 25 feet in diameter and about thirty feet in length from the base to the aperture where the birds had been seen to enter, and it was estimated that the bodies of the swallows found in the hollow trunk would aggregate ten bushels! They were the common white-breasted swallow, mostly, although there were quite a number of martins and swallows among them. Way the birds came there is a mystery that was never solved. That the strange affair actually happened I am quite ready to prove; and though, for personal reasons, I prefer to withhold my name from the public prints, I am willing that all persons who desire a verification of the story should be referred to me." The reporter's informant is an elderly gentleman of undoubted veracity, is now seventy-eight years of age, has been in business in Providence for forty years, and is well known in the commercial circles of the city. He was born and brought up in the house above mentioned as his father's, in Littleton, Me., living there until he was eighteen years of age; he vividly remembers the remarkable event which he has described. —Providence (R. I.) Press.

The other day M. Dreyfus, the millionaire, of Paris, put in all the leading French papers a card, stating that he would not in future be responsible for any of the debts incurred by his son, Maxime. Whereupon the young man issued a counterblast in the form of a circular saying: "M. Maxime Dreyfus, in consequence of the note which has appeared in several journals, is plunged in the deepest misery, and solicits the assistance of his friends, and will be grateful for the smallest contribution. Gifts in kind will be joyfully accepted."

Ridiculous Fashions in Dress.

The tall hat of civilized life appears to Dr. Alfred Carpenter a monstrosity. It is by universal consent neither beautiful nor pleasant. Boots are made on the theory that their first duty is to disguise and misrepresent the contour of the foot. In feminine dress garments are loose where they should be tight, and tight where they should be loose. Places are protected which would be better without any protection, and others left unguarded which need it the most. Materials are selected without any relation to fitness for the office they have to fill. If the eternal substance be appropriate, a lining is commonly appended which spoils its whole use. The animal, vegetable and mineral words have been liberal in exquisite dyes for the embellishment of human clothing. Yet the wearers connive gladly at the superfluous employment by manufacturers of active poisons. Dr. Carpenter is as disdainful of the taste of the fabrics in which his contemporaries enclose themselves as of their wholesomeness. They contravene the laws of true beauty, in his judgment, as criminal as they violate correct sanitary principles.

There is some consolation in the advantages the present generation possesses over more than one of its predecessors in these matters. Gentlemen of position are no longer required to shave their heads in order to make room for a wig. They have escaped from powder. They are not obliged to put on clothes so unbecomingly that their owners, it is recorded, were forced to have themselves dropped into them from a height. They no longer spend fifty or a hundred guineas on a single gorgeous suit. The silk hat, if uglier, is cheaper and handier than the courtly beaver of the days of George III. and the Prince Regent. Masculine attire is easier and less painful than formerly. So little does it vary, that it is permissible to drop out of the fashion without being laggingly ridiculed. It is cheap and unostentatious. For men however, there remain many points of costume to which usage is a one and aversion for the trouble of change can be only the mind. In this early there can be nothing more absurd than the whole apparatus of a grid collars and cuffs and neckties. Only the clergy as yet have had the courage to emancipate themselves from the servitude of stiff hats.

Then evening dress never was any greater travesty of elegance and comeliness invented. Though young boys ought to raise by subscription a statue to the discovery of knickerbockers, their seniors in common steeples, and useless jae ets, and suffocating collars, continue to enjoy in their dress not much more freedom than a herald in his tabard. Women have but begun to meditate on enfranchisement from dress as ungraceful as it is inappropriate. Men, if their clothing is also as grotesque as ever, have at least delivered themselves from the obligation of perpetual change. Women wander, as of old, from one ugly fashion to another as the slaves of ingenious and restless milliners. A test of the merits of each modification is the astonished mockery it encounters from the disciples of its successor. Awkward and extravagant as a fashion may be declared by posterity, for women there is no security that it will not return. By a happy chance they have been saved of late from some remarkable deformities above and around them, devised by the imaginations of dressmakers and hairdressers. But nobody can say how long the interregnum of sense may last. —London Times.

Queen Olga.

Queen Olga looks very Polish, although she resembles her aunt, the Queen of Hanover. The Grand Duke Constantine was Vice-Emperor of Russian Poland when she was a child, which accounts for so much in her air and manner that reminds one of the Warsaw ladies. The face is very regularly proportioned, and yet not in the least classical. Her hair is still very fine, and curls naturally. It is drawn back from the forehead with a comb such as we see in the pictures of "Alice in Wonderland." The face is round in its front contour. It is lighted up by a pair of dark, beaming eyes, which have a soft and kindly expression. The Queen is simple and natural. She looks at once gentle and a woman of spirit. In giving informal audiences she plays a good deal with her mops dog. Like the King, she is more and more struck each time she revisits France with the vitality of the French people, their happy activity, (for, as busy as they are, they have time to look around them, and seem to enjoy keeping their eyes open), and their extraordinary prosperity. —Pall-Mall Gazette.

The bill making appropriations for the support of the Indian Department for the year ending June 30, 1884, now pending in the Senate, appropriates $5,363,155 91. The increase over the House bill is $54,200, $118,300 of which is for the purpose of educating Indians at schools in the states.

WOOD, ACKLIN & Co., of Toledo, Ohio, were losers to the amount of $40,000 by the late fire at that place. Grafton M. Acklin, formerly of Aberdeen, was a member of the firm. Leon Van Loo, formerly of this city, was a partner in the firm of Elton & Van Loo, which also suffered severely.

The Washington correspondent of the Cincinnati News says the feeling among Democrats at Washington is unanimously in favor of McDonald, of Indiana, as the candidate for President in 1884. There is said to be an uprising in his favor in the East as well as in the West, that is so strong, unless something not now foreseen occurs to mar his popularity, his chances for the nomination will be better than those of any other member of the party.

The Postmaster General has issued orders to postmasters at various offices in this state, Alabama, Arkansas, Mississippi, Tennessee and Texas, forbidding the payment of money orders and the delivery of registered letters to the officers of about one hundred and forty of the numerous marriage, birthday and co-operative insurance associations which sprang into existence so suddenly in the South some months since. These institutions, many of them, are reported to have done a thriving business at the start, but for the past month or so have been slowly diminishing in number. It is believed at the department that the effect of this order will be to hasten the dissolution and soon put an end to these fraudulent concerns.

The Cincinnati Enquirer says: A sorrowful story comes from Louisville. The wife of the late Chief Justice Hardin, of Kentucky has been found living on the fourth floor of a tumble-down rookery in absolute want. Her only companion is her seven year old daughter, the rest of her family of five children being scattered through the world, the whereabouts of two of the children being unknown to the mother. Mrs. Hardin lives in one room, and when found the other day by a reporter was without fire or food. The poor woman has been struggling for years to keep herself and the little child from starving to death, and has barely succeeded. Now that her condition is known to the public, relief should come speedily.

An Albany special says S. J. Tilden, Jr., has accepted an appointment as aid on Governor-elect Cleveland's staff.

THE Hon. John D. Young beat Hon. Sam McKee some fifteen or sixteen hundred majority for Congress in this district. McKee, knowing that a democrat, no matter how decisive his majority, would stand no chance with the then republican House of Representatives, if any plausible grounds of contest could be presented by his antagonist, made out grounds of contest against Mr. Young, which were wholly technical and insubstantial, and succeeded in having the seat awarded to him upon what appeared to be a small majority in his favor. The actual votes cast were largely in favor of Mr. Young, and he ought in equity and right to have been allowed to keep the seat. In some of the precincts, the judges were not of different political parties, as the statute required, because it was impossible to procure qualified men to serve, and votes of whole districts were excluded for this reason. Other frivolous objections led to the exclusion of other votes for Mr. Young, and thus the majority was reversed, and Sam McKee made the congressman to the disgust and outrage of the people who had fairly chosen Mr. Young.

It was during the term, we believe, that Mr. McKee thus occupied the place to which Mr. Young had been elected, that the famous "salary grab bill" passed, and the salaries of congressmen were raised to $7,500 per annum with back pay from the beginning of the session. If we are right in this belief, then Mr. McKee received this large rate of compensation, and which by right belonged to John D. Young. If he did not receive this increased rate, he received $5,000 per annum for the two years he served in the place of Mr. Young, and that ought to satisfy him.

We hope the present, nor any future Congress, will be weak enough to allow Mr. McKee the claim he sets up for contesting the seat of Mr. Young. It was an outrage to vote the seat to him to which he had not been elected, and it will be an outrage to pay him a cent more than he has already received.

Never too Late to Learn.

Socrates, at an extreme old age, learned to play on musical instruments.

Cato, at eighty years of age, began to study the Greek language.

Plutarch, when between seventy and eighty, commenced the study of latin.

Boccaccio was thirty-five years of age when he commenced his studies in light literature; yet he became one of the greatest masters of the Tuscan dialect, Dante and Plutarch being the other two.

Sir Henry Spellman neglected the sciences in his youth, but commenced the study of them when he was between fifty and sixty years of age. After this time he became a most learned antiquarian and lawyer.

Franklin did not commence his philosophical pursuits till he had reached his fiftieth year.

Dryden, in his sixty-eighth year, commenced the translation of the Aeneid, his most pleasing production.

Thousands of examples of men who commenced a new study either for a livelihood or amusement, at an advanced age, could be cited. But every one familiar with the biography of distinguished men will recollect individual cases enough to convince him that none but the sick and indolent will ever say, "I am too old to learn."

ROSSER & McCARTHY,
PUBLISHERS AND PROPRIETORS.

TO OUR AGENTS.

We send to-day an increased number of the Evening Bulletins to our agents at Mt. Olivet, Sardis, Mayslick, Washington, Fern Leaf, Germantown, Minerva and other places in the county, which they will please see are properly distributed. The Bulletin contains the Holiday advertisements of the leading merchants of Maysville and will be a good guide for our readers in the county who expect to do their buying in this city.

WHEN you go round on Market street
And Egnew's you drop in,
You'll see all kinds of hollow-ware,
And mighty stacks of tin.
He's got a lot of thingamabobs
To roast and fry and bake,
And stoves of every shape and style
That simply take the cake.

The Bonanza passed down last night.

All the steamers plying on the upper Ohio have temporarily laid up until the ice in the river runs out.

The Morning Mail failed to make her regular trip to this city on Monday, on account of the heavy ice in the river.

FRANK DONAHUE got drunk at Mt. Sterling on Saturday, and next morning was found on the wayside frozen to death.

A MAN who don't buy a Christmas present for his wife now and hide it will miss much of the romance connected with the legendary day.

The Aberdeen Sun, the enterprise of Mr. T. F. Ellis, was issued this morning. It is a neat little journal and is well patronized by the holiday goods dealers of that place.

We are informed that the reservoir is being used for skating purposes. If this is true the Water Company should see that it is stopped immediately. The river water is filthy enough at best.

ALF. BURNETT complained on Saturday night of the very uncomfortable condition of the house in which he performed for want of warmth. This is a reproach to the city which ought to be remedied in the future.

C. S. MINER & Bro. are displaying a very beautiful line of ladies' and gentlemen's slippers which are low in price and well suited for holiday gifts. Those who are looking for a really useful holiday offering will do well to call.

The Vignette, a handsome little Holiday advertising paper, published at Winchester, Ky., by T. F. Donovan, formerly of this city, has been received by the BULLETIN. It is printed in four colors and typographically is very neat.

JOHN WHEELER, in his usual spirit of enterprise, has brought on this season the largest supply of holiday goods of all kinds he has ever offered in this city, which he is selling at prices much lower than usual. Go and see him.

Religious Services.

The Baptist and Southern Presbyterian congregations will hold joint services next Sunday morning at the Presbyterian Church, Third street. Night services at the Baptist Church. Preaching by Rev. J. K. Pace. All invited to attend.

JOHN ALLEN and John Davis, both colored, quarreled about a woman at Paris on Sunday. Allen wanted to take her to a negro village four miles distant, against the wishes of Davis. The latter struck Allen in the face and in return was shot in the abdomen and fatally wounded.

Good clear, clean ice, four inches thick, was taken in large quantities from the ponds and creek on Sunday and Monday last and several large ice houses were filled. We shall not lack this most palatable luxury during the summer as every dealer will, probably, be well supplied.

BY TELEGRAPH.

Frightful Collision on the Pan Handle.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 18, 1882.—Nos. 4 and 5 express train on the P., C. & St. L. R. R. collided at King's Station, on the Little Miami railroad, at 9:15 this morning. Engineer Poke Peters, of the East bound train, and Wharton, a postal clerk, were killed, and six postal clerks were injured. Conductor Tom Ritch's train ran up to the wreck and took aboard the dead and wounded. They were placed in charge of a railroad surgeon and conveyed to Cincinnati. The Kivala troupe were aboard, en route East, but none of the troupe were injured.

The wreck is being cleared away and in a few hours trains will be running on time. No reason is given for the accident.

Lynchings.

DALLAS, TEX., Dec. 18.—Particulars are just received here of the lynching of two men near Hazel Dell, Commanche county. G. W. and Jim. Fraley, brothers, the latter only nineteen years old, had been arrested by a constable on warrants charging them with stealing cotton. The prisoners were taken to Hazel Dell and placed under guard. About 10 o'clock at night a dozen men, armed with shotguns, induced the guards to give up the prisoners. The mob then carried them about a mile and next morning there were found dead, both suspended from the same limb of a tree.

Fatal Boiler explosion.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 18, 1882.—A boiler explosion at the Globe Rolling Mill, to-day killed one man and maimed nearly a dozen more seriously. The boiler was one of a battery of three, and was hurled through the air into the river. The head of the boiler had been cracked for some time but as it was on the inner side it was not observed.

Great Fire at Canton.

NEW YORK, Dec. 18, 1882.—A great fire occurred in Canton, China, Nov. 7th. Eight hundred houses were destroyed, and many lives lost, including firemen burned to death. The Viceroy visited the scene with soldiers to prevent robberies and a fierce fight between citizens and thieves ensued.

LAND owners along the line of the railroad route from here have so long been deluded with the hope of seeing the road under way, that when called upon to relinquish the right of way, hesitate and refuse to do so without something more than an adequate remuneration is offered them. This is all wrong. The present company is in real earnest and ought to meet with no obstruction of this kind. They are willing to pay a fair compensation for the right of way, but will not be imposed upon. If owners of land will not agree at a fair price to allow the road to pass over their land, the statutory commissioners when called upon will fix a price that will be both just to the corporation and to the citizens.

If we have no men of means and active enterprise in our city who will take hold of the enterprise of a street railway, then we must look abroad for men who will come and build it for us. We can assure such parties elsewhere, that no better investment can be made than that of building from three to five miles of street railway in Maysville. It will pay better than anything else, and be a steady lasting source of profit to any one who will engage in it.

WINDHURST & BLUM, the fashionable merchant tailors, are rapidly establishing an enviable reputation. They are artists in their line, and their work in every case has given entire satisfaction. The large business they have been favored with by the best people of Maysville will require an addition being made to their present working force, which speaks well for their skill and taste.

A Model Poet Says:

Long had I looked and searched and sought,
Both stoves and Ranges, too, I bought:
And every kind on earth I tried,
And yet with none felt satisfied,
Hope shed at last one dazzling ray,
The "Omaha" I saw one day;
I found at length the thing I sought—
I went—examined it—and bought.

To buy it is house-keeping law,

What Is There for Mr.?

The year is nearly over, it's toils nearly ended. We want rest and recreation. We want a brief time to forget the thorns and briars, the wrongs that have smarted and tried, the world's increasing fight. Yes we want something more—the Christmas holidays are here and we want nice presents. Every person will say, what is there for me? Let us tell you. J. W. Sparks & Bro. are alive to the wants of the people and have anticipated them in advance and have brought on many nice things, elegant linen and silk handkerchiefs, fine hosiery gloves, lace, scarfs, collars, hats, caps, cloaks for the holiday trade, and they are at prices all can buy. In addition they have a large stock. It is no sensational statement that the bottom has been knocked out of prices and they are offering astonishing bargains at J. W. Sparks & Bro.'s on Market street. d19d6t

POISONOUS SWEETS.

The Ingredients of Which Candies and Their Coloring are Composed—A Warning to Children.

A dispatch from Buffalo, N. Y. says: Prof. W. H. Pitt, State Analyst, was interviewed here to-day on the subject of adulterations. His remarks are important and quite startling. The professor said: "There is a great deal of adulteration, but it is not confined to this or any other season. Goods are adulterated all the time, and the public ought to know it. Glucose is used more extensively than any other substance. It is manipulated with a little flour or starch, and can not be detected by the taste. You will find it in every kind of candy. I think nine-tenths of the cheaper candies are made of glucose. Formerly candy was made of cane sugar, but now the cane product has given way to corn saccharine. Those chocolate creams that creep out at you from the show-case so invitingly, have an interior of glucose, terra alba and starch—nothing else. Gumdrops are composed of gum arabic, with a generous amount of glucose. Many of the ingredients of candy are indigestible. They give body and weight, and are disguised by sweets—gypsum or plaster of paris is largely used. The highly colored candies are dangerous, and should be avoided. Red is produced with vermilion, sulphide of mercury and red lead or oxide of lead—very poisonous. Many of the blues are very poisonous, particularly that made by cobalt blue. Yellow colored candies should never be eaten. The color is produced by chromate of lead, and when once taken into the stomach is never eliminated from the system. It is a wily foe to life, and waits for reinforcement to eventually destroy its victim. Candy toys should never be touched. They are purchased because of their form. A little slipper, cat, dog or a doll is very pleasing, but it contains poison. Those toys are all painted with dangerous colors. They don't break if they fall now as they used to, because they are made of tenacious glucose, and not cane sugar. A fall from a five-story window would hardly hurt them. I don't think you will find a toy made of pure sugar.

An Animated Calendar in Kentucky.
From the Elizabethtown News.

Orange Bennett, colored, is an animated calendar. Ask him what day of the month it is, what day of the week Christmas or Fourth of July comes on, and, without a moment's hesitation, he gives the correct answer. Any date you desire within two years he will give instantly. What makes it so remarkable is he doesn't know one figure from another, and is entirely illiterate.

The Marquis of Lorne and the Princess Louise intend making a tour in the United States of four or five weeks' duration, visiting Los Angeles, South California, and other cities of the Union. During Lord Lorne's absence it is probable that General Sir Patrick L. McDougall, K. C. M. G., will assume the duties of administrator.

Superintendent Whitehead, of the Milwaukee Humane Society, who went to Nebraska to find the abductors of Maggie Hennecke, took Detective Brown and started for Shenandoah, Iowa, to see McEwen, who is in jail. The accomplice of the latter is imprisoned at Hastings, Nebraska. Detective Borden declares that the abducted girl is at a house three miles from Syracuse, Nebraska.

WIT AND WISDOM.

—The time wasted by men in feeling in the wrong pocket would make the next generation rich if they had it.

—A great many people in this community would like to find out just how much money it would take to spoil them. We do not speak for ourselves, but for our poor relations.—N. Y. Herald.

—A traveler stopping at a village inn during a thunder-storm, said to a by-stander: "Why, you have a very heavy thunder here." "Yes," replied the man, "we do, considering the number of inhabitants."

—The Philadelphia News argues that if a man had the strength of an insect in proportion to his size he could jump higher than a mountain. It is quite possible, as mountains are not very high jumpers.—N. O. Picayune.

—Scene in Court: "Now, Mr. Blank, you say that on that day, at noon, you saw a woman ride past your house at a furious pace, and you have given us a detailed description of her costume. Please tell us what was the color of the house?" "I do not remember." "Well, was the woman white or black?" "I did not notice; she went so fast that I only had time to see how she was dressed."—Chicago Tribune.

—"What have you that's good?" said a hungry traveler, as he seated himself at table d'hôte at a Salt Lake City hotel. "O!" said the waiter, "we've roast beef, roast mutton, roast pork and broiled eulaws." "What's a eulaw?" said the traveler. "Why, a bird; something like a snipe." "Could it fly?" "Yes." "Did it have wings?" "Ye." "Then I don't want any eulaw. Anything that had wings and could fly and didn't leave this country I don't want for my dinner."

—"Ah, how are you this morning?" said a Fifth Avenue man to his friend from Jersey. "Pretty well, pretty well," he replied; "but my wife is suffering from a severe cold," he continued, as his face beamed with delight. "Now, that's too bad," exclaimed the New Yorker; "but why do you seem so happy over it?" Taking his friend by the arm, the Jerseyman replied, as tears of joy rolled down his apple-jack-fushed face: "Happy! Don't mention it! Why, she hasn't been able to speak above a whisper for six days."—N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

The Top Rail.

It would be well if every one giving an order should first consider whether it admitted of a misconstruction. A physician's prescription, so the story runs, reads: "When taken to the story shaken." A frightful result followed from shaking the patient instead of the medicine. The following incident is an illustration of how easily soldiers can misconstrue an order when it interferes with their comfort.

During the Peninsular Campaign of our late war one of the Union officers found it necessary to take stringent measures to prevent depredations upon the surrounding country. Complaints frequently came to him that his soldiers used the fence-rails or fire-wood. Accordingly he issued an order that only the top rail should be taken.

Complaints, however, continued to pour in, and soon a private, Michael McHenry, was caught in the act of stealing the lowest rail of a farmer's fence. Michael was an honest fellow and a favorite, being something of a wag. As this was his first offense, the officer determined to be lenient with him. So he had Michael brought to headquarters and demanded of him an explanation.

"Sure, sorr," said Michael, "we was only a 'beyin' orders. Ach of the b'ys tuk the top rail as he come to it, an' I was last, an' sure the bottom rail was then the top one, too."

The uselessness of further explanations was so evident that the matter was dropped. The order had only caused the rails to be taken in order, beginning at the top.—York's Companion.

Webster's Needs.

Mr. Webster's chosen "crony" in his later years was Charles March, much younger than he was, and also a New Hampshire man. Well educated, polished by travel and free from pecuniary hamper, March was a most delightful companion, and his wit, keen as Saladin's cimeter, never wounded. Fletcher Webster was also a great favorite with his father, possessing what Charles Lever called "the lost art of conversation." Sometimes when Mr. Webster's path had been crossed and he was black as night, March and Fletcher would, by repartee and witticisms, drive the clouds away and gradually force him into a conversation, which would soon become enlivened by "the inextinguishable laughter of the gods."—Boston Traveller.

—It is sometimes very convenient to know how to make cookies without eggs; the following recipe is contributed by a reader of the N. Y. Post: Take two cups of sugar, one cup of butter, one cup of milk, one even teaspoonful of soda dissolved in the milk; hot water may be used instead of milk; if it is thought desirable, use four enough to make a soft dough, roll thin, and bake in a quick oven.
